want to claim Personal Independence Payment

05 September 2016

Dear Mr Smith

You may know that Disability Living Allowance (DLA) will end soon for most claimants, including you. This affects you even if your DLA has no end date.

You can't continue to get DLA.

If you want to claim PIP call

DLA and PIP is awarded for help with personal care and for getting around. The element that is linked to automatic qualification for a Blue Badge is the mobility component at a higher rate for DLA or enhanced rate for PIP. A lower or standard rate award does not meet this qualification criterion and should not be taken into consideration.

You should produce to the Council the DLA or PIP award letter from the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) that is addressed to the person in receipt of the benefit. The reference is the claimant's National Insurance number which you will find at the top of the letter which is referenced in the example as 'AB123456C'.

3.3. Any other medical condition

This is an intentionally ambiguous statement to ensure all circumstances are considered if an authorised medical practitioner deems the restriction imposed by the PSPO to be detrimental to a person's well-being.

In this instance a medical practitioner means; a physician or surgeon, and well-being 'the state of being comfortable, healthy, or happy' as defined by the English Oxford dictionary.

The Council would require written confirmation from an authorised medical practitioner that the PSPO restriction is detrimental to a person's well-being.

4. What happens next?

You will be added to an exemption list for a maximum of 1 year, at which point the eligibility will be reviewed.

The Council will issue you with a letter setting out whether you qualify for an exemption under this policy. You must produce a copy of this letter to an enforcement officer if you are asked for it.

The Council will not hold any personal information including medical records in adherence with the Data Protection Act 1998.
